SCENE FROM THE FIRST ACT OF "BEN HUR"

"Brewster's Millions" tonight. "Brewster's Millions" undoubtedly the greatest success of recent years is announced for presentation at the Brooks, tonight by Cohen & Harris comedians.

The play is a mixture of farce and melodrama. Those who have read the story know the plot and can readily understand its claim to popularity. The book has been followed very closely in the main incidents, but it was necessary to adapt the story to the stage. The play is a mixture of farce and melodrama. Those who have read the story know the plot and can readily understand its claim to popularity. The book has been followed very closely in the main incidents, but it was necessary to adapt the story to the stage.

Robert Ober will be seen in the role of "Monty" Brewster supported by the following well known people: Richard Webster, George Crossen, Franklin George, Norman McDonald, George Harcourt, John Alden, Gene Foxcroft, Chas. H. Crosby, Gus Christie, Nat Royster, Frank Hughes, Roger L. McAndrew, June Mathis, Katherine Ray, Charlotte Lambert, Marie Horton, Ellen Van Soli, and Viola Grant.

Al. H. (Metz) Wilson. To render a belief in a sweet and homely manner requires far more cleverness in expression than most classical themes, for nature is art and to be natural is often the more difficult. It is in naturalness that Al. H. Wilson, who will be seen at the Brooks, on Sunday, in Sidney R. Ellis' "When New York Was Dutch," excels. His depth of expression, the pouring forth of the word, are all so beautifully harmonized that one can understand his sobriquet of "golden voiced" and even that does not fully express the glorious richness of tone and quality. In speaking of Mr. Wilson, a well known critic on one of the Metropolitan newspapers says in part: "That perfect made lovers will readily agree that Mr. Wilson has the most abundantly musical voice before the public today, and quiet folk would readily accept his vocal equipment and let that of Cernio go if the choice were offered them."

The play deals with the mishaps of a young German nobleman, exiled from his own country for killing in a duel his superior officer, who had defied the name of his wife's mother. The scenes of the play are laid in New York just after the city had been seized from the Dutch and Col. Richard Nicolls installed by the English as governor. Mr. Wilson, in the part of Metz Von Freiburg, was the governor of a plot to assassinate him and reclaim the city for the Dutch. He meets his wife from whom he was parted in childhood, and though condemned to be shot, escapes the governor's wrath and all ends happily. The action of the play gives Mr. Wilson ample opportunity of displaying at the best the talent which has lately earned him the name of "ambassador of German dialect." His songs "Aut Weidenschen Fraulein," "The Old Chimney Corner" and "Helen," rendered in a manner known only to the "golden voiced" singer" are among the most tuneful ever heard on the stage.

Will See "Ben-Hur." Quite a large number of Guthrie people will go to Oklahoma City Tuesday evening to see the immense production of "Ben-Hur." A special train will leave Guthrie on the Santa Fe at 7 o'clock Tuesday evening, returning after the performance.

Hamford Is Coming. Mr. F. Lawrence Wacker, manager of C. H. Hamford, was in Guthrie today arranging for the appearance of the distinguished portrayer of Shakespearean roles at the Brooks on Saturday night, November 21. Mr. Hamford has been a regular visitor to Guthrie for the past ten seasons, but this season is the first opportunity his

Guthrie admirers will have had the opportunity of seeing him in the greatest of all his extensive repertoire—"The Merchant of Venice."

NOTES OF THE DRAMA

"A Kentucky Boy," by Pauline Phelps and Marion Short, will be Klav & Erlanger's next attraction. The play is now in rehearsal. In this drama the authors open a new field for stage purposes, although one cultivated carefully by the novelist. Cut off from the world by mountain ridges and lack of access by railroads, the dramatic student is likely to find stirring plots and strong characters in the territory which the women playwrights now invade.

"A Kentucky Boy" is a wholesome play, typical of the land and the men and women who dwell therein. Its scenes are laid in the mountains of Kentucky, the Big Sandy region and in New Orleans. Primarily the plot deals with the development and climax of a feud. The mountains of Kentucky were largely settled by Scotch pioneer families, who imported from their native lands, with their families and consciences, ancient quarrels and their own rather deadly methods of settling disagreements. The present feuds are only survivals of the warring of the clans of the Scotland of Queen Mary's days. In the feud of the play the authors have worked out to dramatic and logical conclusions, situations which culminate in a baby grandson, the last of his race, being arranged against his grandfathers. The play looks promising. Its action is absorbing in interest and the authors have written their dialogue in a crisp incisive style.

Lillian Russell has opened in Boston her new tour in "Wildfire," the Broadway-Hobart comedy, in which she made such a great success at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Mr. Joseph Brooks, under whose direction Miss Russell is starring, has surrounded her with a splendid company. So great has been Miss Russell's success as a comedienne that it has been necessary to change her bookings in order that she may play return dates in several towns in which she has already been seen "Wildfire." It was also necessary to extend her season until late in June to fill the demand for the play. Miss Russell will go to the Pacific Coast in the spring, and, as usual, will travel in her private car.

"Ben-Hur," the great Biblical play which is in its tenth season under the direction of Klav & Erlanger, is as popular as it was during its first season. This year the play will be produced in cities West of the Missouri river only. The book "Ben-Hur," by the late General Lew Wallace, is still one of the best sellers in the market. During the next fortnight the publishers will bring out a volume containing the chariot race. This is the first time that any part of a novel has been separated from the original text for publication, and the special favor with which the public is given as the reason for its publication in a volume by itself. Klav & Erlanger have always kept up the high standard of the production.

"The Road Up," Klav & Erlanger's great drama of the Arizona desert, which it achieved there last year. After filling engagements in and near New York City, the play will be sent into Western territory, where it is said to be a great success. The scenic, with the ride of the mount and Indians down the trail which creep along the canon walls, thrills the philosophic of theatre-goers. Macly Albuqueke, as the last sacrifice whom nobody loves, was never more happily cast than he is in the role of "Slim" Hoover.
